Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless -

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

Claims 1-20 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Kahn (U.S. Patent 3,694,053)

Kahn discloses a liquid crystal cell device comprising first and second substrates having respectively formed thereon first and second electrodes, and first and second alignments layers, characterized in that sandwiched there between the first and second substrates is a liquid crystal composition comprising particles aligned in relation to a liquid crystal compound, wherein the orientation of said particles may be changed by the application of an electric field.

Furthermore, such an orientation or homeotropic ordering is achieved either by mixing a surfactant additive with the nematic liquid crystal material or by directly coating the facing electrode surfaces of the planar members 12 and 14 with an appropriate surfactant (column 3, line 15+). To create a preferred anisotropic direction in the nematic liquid crystal thin film, which in turn will give rise to a predetermined molecular orientation in the presence of an electric field applied thereto, a further preparation step included in the course of fabricating the device involves selectively treating the electrode layers that are respectively deposited on the planar members;

Illustratively, the treatment comprises rubbing the electrodes (column 4, line 24+).

Processes other than the above-described rubbing can impose on the nematic liquid crystal thin film a preferred direction for molecular reorientation. For example, depositing a suitable surfactant on the electrode surfaces in an ordered manner can serve both to establish a homeotropic arrangement of the molecules of the film and at the same time to define a preferred direction for molecular reorientation in the presence of an electric field. (column 5, line 4+).
